WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 24, 1864.

QUINCE.

Near a small village in the West, where many ver. v. were in their seats, eat, drink, whilst, and in their seats, to guard it, on evil Church and Steeple, there stood a—“alas! it stands no more!”

A tenement of brick and plaster, “of” which for 10 years and four,

My good friend Quince was born and master!

Welcome he was in his old hall,

To me and his wife, parents and peasants,

In all the sympathies of all,

By making gifts and making presents;

Though all the parish was at strife,

He kept his counsel and his carriage,

And his wife loved a quiet life,

And shrank from Chancery's suits and pear-

riage.

Quince was his name and his name;

Warm were his double ale and feelings—

His partners at the whalebone said,

That he was faultless in his dealings—

He was a church but once a week;

Yet Dr. Puritan, who was a man

An upright man, who studied Greek,

And shrank from the hectoring of the 3d Legion;

And liked to see his friends and master!

Quince was his name and his name;

Warm were his double ale and feelings—
